

Santosha Recovery Sangha Mission Statement

Just as each wave is a part of a limitless and immortal sea, each one of us is a part of a limitless and immortal collective consciousness. Separateness is an illusion that prompts seeking for outside happiness when happiness is within each of us all along. How do I find this authentic happiness and Santosha within? It begins with self-awareness and self-acceptance. And through the practices of Santosha Recovery I open my consciousness to reveal the true nature of self: We are here on earth in these (spacesuits¹) to learn about ourselves and mature spiritually, in yogic terms, soften our karma. There is no failure in life. The forces of karma may so strong at times that we cannot resist the temptation of that karma, but if we are self-aware, we learn from each experience and can await a time when we are strong enough to overcome that karma. I seek to be patient with myself, knowing that knowledge comes from experiencing life with all its triumphs and with all its challenges. I seek acceptance for this journey that I am embarking on in this moment. I seek self-love which when revealed, will blossom into unselfish love for all sentient beings.
